Is the AACOG Law Enforcement Academy Right for Me?

The AACOG Regional Law Enforcement Academy is a vocational training organization that prides itself on preparing people for a career in public service as law enforcement officers, corrections officers, and first responder emergency dispatchers.

In order to achieve this, the Academy is a structured para-military environment with its own rules and expectations for police cadets attending basic peace officer training. These rules and expectations mimic that of policing agencies, and as such, this better prepares police cadets for entering the law enforcement profession and meeting the expectations of future employers.

With this said, over the years Academy staff have addressed cadet performance issues in the cadet classes held. Some of the most frequently violated rules staff have dealt with include:

- 1. Excessive Tardiness and/or Absences
- 2. Cell phone/Smart phone usage during class & training sessions
- 3. Sleeping in Class
- 4. Not meeting the Minimum Academic Standards of the Academy
- 5. Disrespect towards other Cadets

Many people who have violated these rules and have not improved in their actions have eventually been removed from the basic peace officer program.

To ensure your success in the program, it is highly recommended you make sure you are going to follow these rules and the other rules of the Academy. Everyone accepted into the basic peace officer program will have the rules of the Academy shared with them during class orientation, and they will need to provide written acknowledgement they have read and understood these rules.

If you feel there are concerns or issues in your current situations in life that may prevent you from meeting the expectations of the AACOG Basic Peace Officer Program, you may want to reconsider applying for the Academy until you know you will be able to meet the established standards of the program.
